Among those on the auxious sest, in view of the approaching election for county officers, is P. G. Lowe. Mr. Lowe has adopted a somewhat novel method of putting himself favorably before the people He has been sending through the mails to each elector, without regard to party, a nestly printed card, candidly yet courteously setting forth that he has been sheriff for the last two years; that he has done his duty as such, and would be pleased to remain in the position vet another term-Providence and the voters of Leavenworth county being willing. I rather like this method of electioneering. Candidates have been known heretofore to send out to this place and that a jug of indifferent whiskey. But in such cases the benign influences of the jog were too often monopolized by one or two henchmen, to whom the consignment was necessarily made. That plan involved expense, and did not pay.
